“ Like many of the newly hired Lowell Tech grads at Uniroyal Chemical, George taught me how things really worked in the labs. George, Frank Sordi , Bob Barnhart, and many others there made our first working years a pleasure and a sound base for successful careers in the plastics and rubber fields. I also enjoyed going to Danbury and watching George race against Don LaJoie in his purple car. One week he might have taken my advice to hold back to avoid the wrecks in front of him ,when he won a longer feature race. (Well probably not, but he was too nice to tell me !). I'll always remember him as one of the good guys. Paul McKinstry

“ As a young graduate I joined Uniroyal in 69 and worked with George in TSSC through the next decade. He was one of the most respected in the building. He was always willing to help anyone. George was recognized by being awarded the highest level available to a lab technician.

As a graduate engineer I figured I should be able fix a car. However, I had a transmission that I had no clue how to fix. I showed up in the parking lot with my transmission in the trunk. George told me me what to do and of course he was right. After returning to TSSC in early 90's I had the opportunity to work with him again. Same guy, always ready to help. People like like him made working for Uniroyal almost like a family company.

George didn't make many mistakes but his biggest mistake was not recognizing earlier that the love of his life was right next to him(everyone else in the building did!). He finally got it right.

I hope the families pain is mitigated by the great life he lived and your many memories of him.

“ George and I worked together at Uniroyal Plastics Development Lab in the early 1970's. We had coffee together five days a week, twice a day for five years. I flew with George several times (really good pilot). Together with made brownies with rubber and set them out for the guys in the labs. I preferred to walk the mile and a quarter to work, but he insisted I wait for him at the corner of my street and the main road during the Winter. We shared many a laugh together. I was just wondering about George this past Sunday evening, but I couldn't get the spelling close enough to successfully Google him. He used to talk with me about Margo, and it was obvious that he loved her as much as one can love someone. I still have my memories of him, but that's not enough ... I miss him. ...
